MARTIAL LAW PRACTICALLY USED IN FLOOD AREA

BLASTING CONTINUES

Stragglers Still Make Way To New Orleans As Flood
Moves South

NEW ORLEANS, Apr. 29 (I.N.S.).—Louisiana today put forth her supreme effort to stem the havoc of the raging Mississippi.

With the crest of the unprecedented flood coursing into the channel at the northern end of the state the most drastic relief effort in history culminated at Poydras, the spot 12 miles below New Orleans designated for the unleashing of the devastating waters upon hundreds of square miles of new territory.

The blasting of the Poydras levee, engineers said, would lower the water level at New Orleans between 24 and 30 inches but with upstream levees in grave danger at three points, none would hazard the unqualified statement that the relief would be sufficient to prevent new overflows north of the city.

Twenty-five miles above New Orleans the east bank levees were threatened by seepage. Ten thousand men—one to every seven feet—were at work on a twelve mile stretch, throwing on sand bags to reinforce the protective wall.

Sixty miles further up-stream, the Louisiana levee patrol near Glasscock were warned of danger to the main levee.

Twenty miles above Glasscock a force of 12,000 men worked under military regime capping the levee near Angola, where the inflow of the Red River has sent the Mississippi waters to the level of the dykes.

Virtual martial law prevailed from day-break today in the territory in which the levee line is to be ripped open with dynamite. State troops patrolled the highways and fast river boats with armed guardsmen aboard maintained a dead line across the river.

A LESSON AT HOME

(EDITORIAL)

AS we approach the close of National Fire Prevention Week, hopeful that each member of this community has a clearer idea of the terrific and useless yearly loss inflicted by preventable fires, and confident that the most common causes of such wasteful destruction will be eliminated for the future, it is perhaps appropriate to give some additional strength to such a community purpose by re-stating what we have said upon several previous occasions, namely, that even though a property and its contents be fully insured, such a loss inevitably comes out of the pockets of all the people, in addition to which no insurance could cover the indirect losses that are a consequence of every big fire.

We need not go outside of Bristol for complete illustration and proof of that statement. Some months ago the Forrest Theatre was destroyed by fire. Practically speaking, it burned to the ground. It had been a paying proposition. It had been a profitable thing for the owner of the ground, for the owners of the building, for the lessees of the building, and, like all such successful enterprises, it had been profitable to other businesses in its vicinity.

The theatre drew patronage from those who came into Bristol from the outlying section primarily for the purpose of making purchases from Bristol merchants, and in like manner the merchants of Mill street drew patronage from those who came into town primarily to attend the Forrest Theatre.

Let us wholly disregard whether or not the building and contents were fully insured, and consider what the other inevitable consequences have been.

Throughout the entire period since the fire, that valuable piece of ground has been wholly unproductive of revenue. The actual money loss we do not know, but certainly it has been large.

A very much greater loss has been sustained through the complete suspension of revenues from theatre audiences, and by this time that sum must amount to many, many thousands of dollars.

Throughout all the intervening months since that disastrous fire, the actual cause of which never has been learned, the site has been wholly unproductive of any revenue whatever. The insurance, even if covering the entire value of the original building and its contents, did not cover a dollar of the terrific and eventual indirect loss.

Can anyone accurately measure such an indirect loss? Obviously not. Individual merchants along Mill street have some idea of what it has meant to their own respective revenues; but no one knows or can actually assert what it has meant in the aggregate.

As already has been said, the actual cause of that disastrous fire has never been learned. But we all know that it started from something. The fires that need never have occurred in this country are so large a ratio of the whole—something like 80%, Mr. Wentworth, of the National Fire Prevention Association, told Borough Council a few weeks ago—that it is not beyond the bounds of reasonable assumption that the Forrest Theatre fire was just one more that might have been prevented, by proper precautions in the way of scientific and systematic fire prevention.

Doesn't that fire afford us a striking object lesson as to the manner in which the direct and indirect losses from a fire are wholly beyond a maximum insurance coverage, and how they spread themselves over an entire community?

Doesn't it drive home the value of fire prevention, and the binding moral obligations that are upon each of us in respect of all the rest of the community?

Doesn't it illustrate beyond argument or doubt that all business enterprises and activities within a community are in a greater or less degree inter-dependent, and that the loss sustained by one is to some extent a loss shared by all?

Doesn't it blazen forth the unmistakable truth that the best interests of each and all demand complete co-operation by each and all, in the most efficient methods of fire prevention and fire fighting?

Fire Prevention Week should mean something very definite to each and every one of us.

BRISTOL GUNNER TELLS OF HIS EXPERIENCES IN BRINGING DOWN A 964-POUND BEAR

Edward Wallace Gives Thrilling Account of Encounter With Huge Animal — Is Member of Fish and Game
Protective Association

FROM childhood I have been a hunter of small game from rabbits to fox, having been fairly successful, I naturally had a good opinion of myself as a hunter. At every opportunity I would be off in the woods with my faithful dog and gun down in the pines of my boyhood home in Jersey. After coming to Bristol I still followed the sport with much interest, but had the desire to try for bigger and more dangerous game, having heard from the local gunners of our town of bear and deer being seen in the vicinity. So one cold and snowy December morning I started with my 30-30 Savage and field glasses out to Jake Winder's woods and upon entering the woods I thought my every footfall could be heard. After three or four hours I noticed at a distance of a half mile or so a speck moving over the snow. My glasses showed this to be a big male bear. He was traveling in a straight line. I watched him carefully for about half a mile and found that he was going about a quarter of a mile from me. I then ran as fast as I could to a place I judged to be directly in his road, and there I lay down. I was so badly out of breath that had he come along directly I should probably have missed him, but something induced him to stop for ten or fifteen minutes, and when he finally came over the ridge about two hundred yards away from me, I was over the effects of my running. Although I am not sure that my hand was really steady, I fired and the magnificent animal crumpled up with the first bullet. Upon approaching carefully I found I had pierced his heart, and of course in that case death must have been instantaneous. I shall never forget the inspiring sight. On going back to town with my trophy, I found he weighed 964 pounds.

Yours for bigger game.

WRITE ESSAYS ON FIRE PREVENTION

Bristol School Children Give Advice For Preventing Conflagrations

HOLD MOCK TRIAL

Essay writing has proved beneficial in assisting the children of the Bristol public schools to drive home their thoughts in connection with fire prevention.

The instructors at the Wood street building have had a number of essays on this subject returned to them, some of which have splendid subject matter. Groups, which have been organized among the students, have paid several visits to alleys of the town, and reported places that should be cleaned of debris. Then individually they have worked hard, to the end that their own cellars, attics and back yards might be rid of rubbish, etc.

In the fifth grade the children have read and written stories on Fire Prevention Week. Also they have cut from magazines pictures of articles with which to clean; and then clipped pictures of rooms showing how they appeared after cleaning.

One of the essays entitled "Fire Prevention" by Alethia Myers deserves attention. This composition was given as a talk before the first and second grades of the Wood street school. It is here given in full:

This week has been set aside by the borough as fire prevention week. We all know how harmful fires are, and we should take every possible means to be freed of them. Almost the entire city of Chicago was swept out by a fire, caused simply by a milkmaid milking her cow. When she finished she forgot the lantern and the cow kicked it over in some straw which immediately caught on fire. If she had been more careful she might have saved almost the whole city of Chicago.

Most fires are started from carelessness. Sometimes matches are left where little children are. Of course they don't know any better, strike them, and sometimes are burned to death. Matches should be kept in metal receptacles, or else we should use safety matches, for little children can't strike them without the box.

Some things we may do to help prevent fires are: Clean all the old rags and papers from attic and cellar—many fires are caused this way and from men throwing cigarette butts in waste paper baskets. If you see a man throw a cigarette on the ground, tell him he is making himself an enemy to his country for no true American would wish to harm his country by fires.

Let us make believe we are scouts—"Fire Scouts" we will call ourselves, and go around preventing fires. If we go on a hike in the woods we will be sure, before leaving, to put out our fire by drenching it with water or covering it with sand or dirt. A forest fire is one of the worst kinds of a fire although all kinds are dreadful.

If you ever get a fire don't run out in the air. For the air makes it worse and many lives are lost this way. But remember to grab a rug and roll yourself in it. Don't push the flames up towards your head but down towards your feet.

Some time ago in Montreal there was a fire in a theatre. The exits weren't large enough and the people becoming excited rushed towards the door. Of course the big people trampled on the children and 70 lives were lost.

Remember one thing: If you are ever in a fire don't get excited, but keep your head.

If there is ever a fire in your home don't rush around like a wild (Continued on Page Four)

THE REAL THING

"April presents no prettier picture than that of green fields, with rustic stiles between the openings of the hedges, where old footpaths go in and out, winding along until lost in the distance; with children scattered here and there, singly or in groups, just as the daisies are, all playing or gathering flowers."

So says someone in a book devoted to beautiful descriptions of the months of the year. There is much more than is here quoted about the month with which we are just now afflicted, but it is all to the same effect, and all equally untrue. It tells us about children chasing butterflies, or lying prone on the grass, or filling their pinafores with beautiful flowers, etc., etc.

We have no respect for the person who wrote these lines. He did not know our month of April. He knew only the poet's April, which doesn't exist anywhere except in the poet's fancy. Flowers, pinafores, butterflies, children prone on the grass! We know them not in this month of April. Hail, sleet, snow, rain—this is our portion. Increasing cold, high winds, fair and warmer, rising temperature, falling temperature—these are our lot. At night we take things in from the box just outside the window to keep them from freezing; in the morning we put them out again. We drain the alcohol from the radiator of the old bus, and then worry all night for fear the contents will be one solid cake of ice in the morning.

As a month, April isn't much, but after all perhaps the year wouldn't be complete without it.

FLETHORA OF FICTION

Five million people are today buying newsstand fiction in this country and it is the exceptional month that does not witness the introduction of at least one new monthly periodical. Of course as the years pass some of these purveyors of fiction suspend publication but the new arrivals exceed the departures.

The average newsstand and stationery store offers its patrons a choice from among fifty or more magazines of which the majority are devoted to fiction. The avidity with which the public devours this form of reading matter has made its publication highly profitable to both publishers and retailers, although it is to be feared that most of it is more entertaining than edifying to the reading public.

But while the demand for newsstand fiction has multiplied many times over, the demand for the good has increased proportionately with that for the bad and indifferent. It is difficult to recall when there has been so much excellent magazine reading as there is today, so while the greater popularity of trashy magazine fiction is not occasioned by a dearth of worthwhile magazines, it can be tolerated if it is in any way responsible for the improvement in quantity and quality of the better periodicals.

As an eye-opener matrimony is well up in the lists.

"The world do move" but not at all times in the right direction.

We are a queer people, and if sparrows were rare we might be putting up boxes to entice them.

One thing about going to church is that the Monday papers don't mention the funeral arrangements.

THE MERCHANTS HERE--

Are known to all of us and if purchases made here are not satisfactory they can readily be exchanged and the MERCHANTS WILL MAKE IT RIGHT.

A CIVIC DUTY--

It is a civic duty owed to the community to buy in our home town. Local merchants support Bristol and its activities and in turn they deserve to be supported.

VARIETY OF STOCKS--

Often times it is the complaint of the shopper who goes out of town to buy that local stores do not carry the assortment or the grade of stock which is desirable. Any wide-awake merchant will stock his shelves with that class of merchandise that is demanded. That is only good business.

PRICES ARE LOWER--

This is another excuse which is often given by those who go out of Bristol to shop. It is reasonable to suppose that merchants here are not making any larger profits than those engaged in business in the cities. Overhead expenses in Bristol are sure to be lower than those in the high rent districts of the large cities.

As I see it—

Observations About Events,
Persons and Things Which Are of General Interest. : : :

IN BRISTOL as in hundreds of other boroughs and cities throughout the nation, men and women are buying their homes with the aid of building and loan associations.

Not only that, but thousands more are being assisted in a systematic manner to save money, from small sums to large, to the end that in their later life they will not be dependent.

Independence is something we all prize to a certain extent. Some individuals, though independent as far as family ties are concerned, are not financially independent. The desire to take a pleasure trip would easily be met if it were not for lack of funds. No one needs their personal attention or companionship, probably, but in earlier years, they did not save. Hence for them their after years are pleasureless or nearly so.

Nowadays, we hear on all sides of those who have made saving a habit. With some it is the custom each year to subscribe a few shares in one of the many building and loan associations in the town, and when their different series commence to be paid off, each year, a neat sum is added to their other savings.

These people are financially independent.

Many young couples, and older ones as well, are purchasing their homes through payments in such associations. The majority of cases prove that no larger sum is required each month than would necessarily have to be expended for rent; and in a few years' time the houses belong to them.

Ambitious parents, desirous of having their sons and daughters secure a college education, use this means of preparation, subscribing to several shares when their children are quite small.

Representatives of such associations are always willing to explain each detail connected with the purchase of shares, either single or double payment plan; rate of interest; number of payments, etc.

Residents of this section realize the advantage of such methods of retaining and adding to a portion of their earnings.

Building and loan companies in this section boast of many members; and citizens here are fortunate in having in their midst such association of long standing and those so well conducted as: The Fidelity Building & Loan Association, Bristol Building Association, Harriman Building and Loan Association, Union Building and Loan Association, Merchants and Mechanics Building Association, and the Townsite Building Association, of Bristol; the Croydon Building Association; the Benevolent Building and Saving Fund Association, of Newportville; and the William Penn Building and Loan Association, of Tullytown. Indian. If it is beyond your control run to the nearest fire alarm box and put in the alarm. I think every boy and girl knows how to put in a fire alarm. You break the glass, open the door and pull down on the lever inside.

And now let us not forget that we are good "Fire Scouts," always looking for some way to prevent fires. And let us not forget after about a month all about fires, but have "Fire Prevention Week" all the year.

St. Ann's parochial school children have all received the questionnaires and are now making investigations at their places of residence. These slips will be asked for by the instructors on Monday of next week.

This morning in the opening exercises of the seventh grade room at the Jefferson avenue building, a splendid little play was presented, the theme being woven around fire prevention. Fine suggestions were driven home in this manner.

The play was in the form of a mock trial called "The Trial of Fire." The arch criminal, "Carelessness," was banished from America forever as a "Man Without a Country" in the course of the sketch. The children impersonated the court clerk, officer, judge, attorneys and other officials; while others took the part of a cigarette, match, electricity, rubbish, gas, lightning, etc.

"The Fire Song," written to the tune of "Marching Through Georgia," has been memorized by the Bath street school children. This song, which was printed in an edition of the Courier this week, is a catchy number, and the children enjoy singing it.

The subject of fire prevention is not new at the Bath street building, as each year Fire Prevention Week has been observed; and this year is no exception to the general rule.

FIFTH WARD BOYS
BOW TO 3RD WARDERS

The Third Warders defeated the Fifth Warders by the score of 11-3 last evening at Leedom's Field. The feature of the game was the snappy fielding of Reese, Jim Massillo and Shields, who pulled many snappy plays. John Massillo pitched airtight ball, not allowing the fifth warders a hit. The hitting of "Black Bat"

Court also featured.
